POL 471/2371: URBAN REVOLUTION: CONTEMPORARY CONSTELLATIONS OF SPATIAL POLITICS

Tuesday 2:00-4:00pm UC 148

Course Description and Objectives

French sociologist Henri Lefebvre published Urban Revolution in 1970 as a commentary on practices of political resistance and as a critique of modern urbanism. “Urban Revolution” refers not only to the various uprisings of 1968, but to the rapid growth and transformations of cities around the world, resulting in emerging forms of economic production and modes of life. “The urban,” according to Henri Lefebvre, has supplanted “the industrial” as the force of historical change and engine of capitalism. Today we reexamine these central propositions. Recent events, from the Arab Spring and Occupy Wall Street to anti-austerity protests in Athens and anti-Olympic demonstrations across Brazilian cities, suggest that urban space is coming to matter for radical politics in crucial ways. At the same time, rapid population growth, widespread gentrification, the financialization of everyday life, the militarization of infrastructure and the competition of “Global Cities” pose new challenges to communal living and to planning and policy-making. Everyday organizing for housing, access to food and water, transportation, environmental safety as well as cultural and social services also add to the complex fabric of urban struggles.

This seminar follows in the footsteps of Lefebvre’s analysis and argues that it is only by examining processes that shape the urban and its inhabitants that we can begin to understand the conditions of the contemporary world and therein the potential for social justice. Working with concepts from urban studies, geography and political theory, it asks two main questions: What are the contemporary constellations of urban society? And, what are the conditions of possibility for resistance in and against the violence and exploitation cemented in urban spaces? These questions are posed in a variety of contexts, both in the global North and the global South. The theoretical and empirical engagements of the course are thus carried out with the aim of being able to understand the 21st century city as an emerging political form and to address the urgent crises that mark its present moment.

Requirements

Participation

It is assumed that students will attend every session—and arrive on time—unless a serious illness or emergency arises. Our classroom will be a safe academic environment where ideas are devised, debated, and deconstructed. I encourage you to participate even if you think that your views may be unpopular with other students. A university is an important place to debate difficult issues—and in doing so, to challenge others, to appreciate unfamiliar viewpoints, and to reflect upon and deepen one’s own convictions. All students are encouraged to think out loud and to exchange ideas openly.

As a seminar, this course will be directed by and for students. It is essential that you take your role as active participant seriously. The success of the seminar is dependent on the group's ability to work together and, through intelligent discussion, develop an understanding of the material that you would not have thought of on your own. A seminar is an ongoing and open conversation that unfolds through our collective engagements throughout the semester. The participants therefore carry the burden of responsibility for the quality of the discussion. Good discussions tend to occur when participants study texts closely in advance, listen actively, share their ideas and questions freely, and respond respectfully and generously to their peers.

Reading and Critical Responses

The readings are the foundation of the course. "Required readings" are exactly that. Students should read all the required materials before class and be prepared—with notes—to discuss the major issues raised in the material. "Additional readings" are recommended texts that advance the week's themes and can be used by students wanting to delve more deeply into a topic. Students are expected to read closely and with a critical eye. Students are also encouraged to suggest additional readings and to circulate to the class relevant texts (news articles, multimedia clips, personal essays, relevant events and conferences, journals, calls for papers etc.) that they discover throughout the semester.

In addition to the weekly readings, you must submit a total of 3 critical reading responses. These must be more than descriptions or summaries and must interpret and analyze one or more of the main ideas, concepts or arguments presented in the reading. Students should use these papers both in order to reflect closely on a text or series of texts and to experiment with their own ideas. Papers must be turned in on the day the readings will be discussed. Students may choose which weeks to turn in a response, although the first response must be turned in by February 14th and students may not turn in a response on the day they are facilitating discussion.

Seminar Facilitation

Each student is expected to lead the seminar discussion at some point during the semester. Seminar facilitation will be done individually or in small groups of 2-3. A schedule of will be established the first day of the course. Those facilitating discussion on a given day should prepare a concise presentation (approximately 20 minutes) as well as questions or activities to stimulate discussion and inspire the exchange of ideas. Your introductory presentation should not merely summarize the readings, but might include some or all of the following:

- An introduction to the topic or reading. Who wrote the piece? When? With what purpose in mind? Why is the text relevant to the class?
- An analysis of how various readings for the week are connected to one another. If there are multiple assigned readings, think about how they are similar and on what points they diverge. How might each extend/challenge each other? What would the authors have to say to one another in a conversation?
- A critical account of each reading. This is not just a matter of telling the group "how you feel" about the text, but should argue something based on evidence. Was the text convincing? Why or why not? What assumptions underlie each analysis? Are these assumptions tenable? What is made visible (or invisible) through this interpretation? Does the author enable us to think in new and useful ways about the contested nature of urbanization? How might this text be situated within the larger framework of the class and the main debates over Urban Revolutions? Try to be specific (textual passages are always helpful) and provocative (raise points that you think might be of interest to others in the class as well) in your analysis.

Final Paper

All students are expected to write a final research paper of approximately 20 pages in length. Papers should make use of the materials that we have covered in class and should consider the utility of some of the approaches, vocabulary and concepts for interpreting and understanding contemporary urban phenomenon. That being said, students (especially graduate students) are encouraged to use the readings and issues raised by the class to explore their own research agendas. Full details of the assignment will be given in class. A preliminary research prospectus will be due in class on February 14th while final papers will be due by email on April 4th.

Evaluation

The grade for the class will be determined as follows:

Participation	15%
Reading Responses	30%
Seminar Facilitation	15%
Research Paper	40%

Academic Policy

Academic Integrity

Plagiarism is a serious academic offence and will be dealt with accordingly. For further clarification and information, please see the University of Toronto's policy on Academic Integrity at <http://www.utoronto.ca/academicintegrity/resourcesforstudents.html>.

Students are strongly advised to keep draft work and hard copies of their assignments until the marked assignments have been returned.

Deadlines

All deadlines are firm. Students will not be given an opportunity to reschedule their seminar facilitation if they are absent or unprepared on the scheduled date. Late submissions of response papers will not be accepted. Final papers will be penalized 5% for each 24 hours after the deadline. If you have extenuating circumstances that are affecting your ability to meet deadlines, please speak with me in office hours as soon as you can.

Other Resources

Accessibility

The University of Toronto is committed to accessibility. If you require accommodations or have any accessibility concerns, visit <http://www.studentlife.utoronto.ca/as> as soon as possible.

Writing

The University of Toronto offers many helpful resources and tools to aid students in academic writing. I strongly suggest that you familiarize yourself with the workshops, tutoring services and advice guides provided at <http://www.writing.utoronto.ca>.

Readings

There are three required books for the class available at the U of T bookstore: Henri Lefebvre's The Urban Revolution, Manuel Castells' The City and the Grassroots, and David Harvey's Rebel Cities. All other required readings will be available through Blackboard or the U of T libraries.
