

Service- Learning and some content would be repeated].

This is a unique hands-on, policy skills course, learned in a community setting. It is aimed at developing marketable skills upon graduation. Community service pays huge dividends in networking and skill-building. Please note that this Course requires students to participate in community Service-Learning, along with its normal academic load of weekly lectures, readings and written work. The Service-Learning component will comprise a total of 20-25 hrs of activity, additional to that of mandatory Class attendance; perhaps spread over 8-10 weeks of one or other Term during weekday, daytime hours. ... As well as additional hours, the Service-Learning component may require additional written work for the Host, not the Course [see www.ccp.utoronto.ca]

Please note the unusual academic workload of this “H-Y” Course: Because 45 Service-Learning spots cannot be secured in one Term, it extends across a full academic year [Y] providing a half-credit [H] towards your GPA. While there is no greater formal teaching [24hrs] or written assignments [2] than a typical H course, there are fifteen 1.5hr lectures, not twelve 2hr lectures. Note the Coaching sessions, for bonus marks, see below.

If you seek a modest, quick, half-credit or have an exceptionally heavy academic load elsewhere, do not take this Course. If you wish to experience a unique community-based POL Course providing skills and personal contacts, allot your time accordingly. Please see the instructor as well if you have questions about the overall volume of written work. Please see Course testimonials on p. 6, below.

Citizenship – Renewing Civic Engagement

Dr. Anthony Careless

careless@chass.utoronto.ca

Course Description

This Course assesses the vitality of Canada’s citizenship in the context of its overall democratic health. Citizenship is both a right and a responsibility. “Active citizenship involves building caring communities that embody both rights and responsibilities [E. Shragge]. “Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your county” [JF Kennedy]. “It’s about we, not me” [B. Obama].

To enjoy or exercise citizenship is more a matter of attitude than institutions. While other courses may focus on remedies that involve extending rights via legal, Charter or institutional (e.g., electoral or parliamentary) reform – or “what government can do for us” -- this Course considers our decline in collective values, trust, and political efficacy as factors affecting duty, trust, respect, the common good, responsibility and reciprocity. The overall objective of the Course is to provide students with an understanding of, and possible remedies for, their generation’s low citizen (civic and political) engagement.

This is a pragmatic “how-to” Course. It increases your job market-ability! It aims to teach how to provide policy analysis and advice for day-to-day governance. It focuses on practical solutions for public figures. Thus the Course is supplemented by coaching sessions led by community actors and past students now practising in a policy environment. Writing assignments are aimed at producing an industry-standard Briefing Note containing policy advice on concrete steps to improve democratic participation. Coaches will also initiate role-play situations.

Politics is the art of “getting to yes” over divisive economic/social/cultural matters among stakeholders who may disagree. Students can be empowered in their senior years of study to understand and facilitate this. This Course includes a unique learning format using a service-learning placement with a local community agency or organization negotiating among many interests and priorities. Service-learning is reflective participation by a student in a community initiative/event for the purpose of testing academic insights. As Service, the student donates ~20 hours of “volunteering” to support an agency event/activity to meet its designated needs. As Learning, the student participates with intentional learning goals, which permit reflection on the role, objectives, challenges and achievement of stakeholder accommodation, from the Course perspective.

Service-learning is not a co-op/internship because no life career is being sought. Yet service-learning is not mere observation, volunteering or community “hours” because a lifelong leadership skill in civic participation is being sought. Your community volunteering with municipal or NGO agencies is pre-designed to help test the ideas studied in the Course and develop your critical reasoning, life choices and civic awareness. In this service-learning component students may serve as facilitators in stakeholder discussions on community redevelopment; research models of service/renewal in other jurisdictions; attend and report on service provider meetings; develop databases; do literature searches; and evaluate the potential for common ground in complex multi-stakeholder environments.

Course Learning Objectives

The Course first develops a diagnostic of the elements in a “democratic deficit”. To remedy the deficit based on citizenship, we then survey the stimulation of social cohesion, public judgement and social capital in our civic society as preconditions for heightened political engagement, which, indeed, governance should reciprocate. Next, we consider those citizen initiatives to overcome low civic engagement through voluntarism, direct/participatory/representative/associational democratic processes, and community self-development. Finally, we consider what government can do to enrich civic activism.

The restoration of civic engagement matters; it reflects social engagement and sociality which

- creates a basis for shared meaning
- fosters awareness of and support for a common good
- increases the likelihood of concerted action
- diminishes the elite/exclusive act
- provides a basis for concerns re fairness and justice
- enables greater adaptability to social change and social heterogeneity

The way back to new citizenship and interest in the above includes:

- affirming a nation’s sense of identity
- justice in claims making
- openness to competing identities
- tolerance of others who disagree
- a willingness to show self-restraint in place of laws of enforcement
- a willingness to deliberate together
- action that is top-down [changed governance] and bottom-up [community organization]

Course Presentation and Grading

15 weeks of 1.5 hour classroom lectures spread over two Terms plus 20 additional Fall or Winter service-learning hours with a community partner. Classroom time includes practitioner coaching sessions. Written assignments include: a) a Briefing Note survey of the citizen deficit literature (30%); b) periodic written reflections on your Service-Learning Placement and Class discussions (20%); c) a second essay that explores Course remedies for low citizenship in the context of your actual service-learning (45%); d) your partner’s professionalism assessment of you (5%). Optional coaching sessions earn 0.5 bonus marks per evening.

This is a role-play course where you are learning the skills of a policy analyst/adviser and timely delivery of your products is a must. The penalty for late material is 5 marks off the project grade every 24 hours or part, including weekends, until the end of Term, thereafter the paper is not accepted. If written work misses the specified word count by 5% more or less there is a deduction of 1 mark for every 100 wds or part over or under Attendance: one mark will be deducted per missed Class; four or fewer absences will waive the penalty. Documented medical or extreme family matters may waive the penalty. You are responsible for knowing the weekly readings and will be quizzed on them.

Please ensure you know the Faculty rules re Plagiarism: see <http://www.writing.utoronto.ca/advice/using-sources> Ensure you can download/print a significant volume of Course readings. You must read a weekly Issues Note. Please only communicate by email using your UTOR email address; attachments must be in Word, not pdf.

Code of Behaviour

Since you are being placed into a real-world work experience [and will be rated on your professionalism there] we also simulate that in your Class/Course performance. Please note the stringent requirements for written work, class attendance, preparedness, the heavy writing load over 48 weeks [16 of them lecture] and immovable deadlines. Just as a Minister cannot accept meetings missed, work handed in late, work over or under length, and work written in unapproachable academese, we'll role play this situation in POL 494

Note also the Code of Behaviour specified in the Service-Learning Handbook, handed out in the first Class

Lest this seem unapproachable see the testimonials below:

"It has been a long time now, or at least it feels like it. This is CD, a student of yours from a few years ago. You were a remarkably useful resource and sounding board during my undergrad years. In fact, I don't think I would be where I am today if it wasn't for you and your helpful nature.

"I was thinking about the internship that I completed at Public Interest last winter and just how valuable that experience and the course was. At first, it was difficult adjusting to the non-theoretical, practical nature of the course; simply because it is so different from what is generally offered within the department. And, I want to extend my thanks for that unique learning experience. Kaneil

"My involvement with Student Vote originated out of a service-learning project for a seminar class and quickly evolved into a personal project of passion. I completed the time commitments within the first week of my placement, yet continued my contribution to this non-profit on a full-time basis. ... At Student Vote I was motivated by the desire to engage and invite youth to share my passion for the political process and legislation – to make them understand how government and their choices matter. Laura

"I thought you might be interested to know that I'm about to accept a position with Metrolinx doing policy analysis. I took your advice and have decided to leave law school for the time being and help the GTHA get to yes on their transportation issues. If it hadn't of been for your class I would never have known it was something I may be good at or enjoy; so thank you. Hope you're well Tom

"I'm hoping you remember me from your Democracy in Decline Class from 2010-2011. I know it has been a long time since we chatted but I really wanted to tell you how much your lessons in class have taught me. I talk about your class all the time to my colleagues and I am so happy to have learned the things I did. I have been involved in a couple of projects and one of them is a direct result of the knowledge I gained from this course! Anyway, I hope all is well! I just wanted to e-mail to say thank you again for all of the wonderful lessons learned from the class. Hopefully when my project is close to coming to fruition, you will be able to provide me feedback! I hope you are enjoying your school year so far and if you need volunteers or help with anything please do not hesitate to contact me! Regards, Laizabelle

"I found your class to be the most challenging one I took during my undergraduate degree, but also the most rewarding because of its emphasis on acquiring skills and not just knowledge. I liked how the course was practical in the sense that it defined clear cut problems and offered concrete solutions to them, as opposed to exclusively studying different theories/paradigms/thinkers and contemplating problems with no solutions (which were my main gripes with a lot of the other Poli Sci courses I've taken). I really felt that the type of approach to solving problems that POL 491 helped me develop actually gave me a better perspective in the other classes that I took last year I ended up using the short introductory chapter by Nevitte (in one of the required books) for essays in a few other classes). I liked how his tone was optimistic (citizen-state relations aren't deteriorating, they're changing) compared to Putnam and others who were focused on the "decline". I also really liked the amazing series of guest speakers. I had no conception of how many different types of careers people can embark on from a political science background. The lawyer who came in towards the end of the year to talk about ADR really impressed me. Her description of the "legal knowledge deficit" on the part of the Canadian public and how some lawyers are trying to address it really cemented my desire to go to law school. Daniel

"I wanted to thank you for an opportunity to take your course. Your lectures gave me a better understanding of the democratic deficit and ideas on how it can be reduced especially the issue of trust within a society. Kinisha

"Thank you for all of your time and effort put into creating one of the most innovative classes I have experienced during my time at U of T. Thomas"

"It was the most unique experience during my time at University of Toronto, and that is quite the statement, seeing as I had many interesting courses during my time here!!" Vanja

Appendix Writing Assignments

The aim of writing assignments in this Course is for each student to develop good, pragmatic policy advice by demonstrating proficiency with concepts, issue mapping, problem identification, and policy options -- and for the class as a whole to integrate these into a single document. This incorporates critical listening, literature search, service-learning, interactive discovery and argument.

It may be quite different from what you have done so far in your writing output, so read on!

Just as a doctor will analyze biological health by: identifying vital signs, knowing the parameter of “good” health for each, map an illness scenario, and prescribe interventions for health... so also with the “body politic” you will: understand critical terms, see them as ‘concepts’ with parameters, map a deficit scenario, and prescribe interventions.

This is a clinical approach [political science], not a normative advocacy [political theory], and mirrors the “fact-finding” that might be done in a corporate, public sector or negotiating setting.

Your Context

1. You are reviewing the Course literature in a briefing language. Avoid other sources, theory, exhortations [“must”], and reifications [“Canadians”, “Citizens”, “people”]. If you wish to wrestle with authors “Smith says this, but Russell says this” confine it to a footnote. Avoid “I”; this is not a personal letter to a friend.

2. It's a Minister's briefing note; not a free-standing literature survey. You need to think "what does the Minister NEED to know?" and for each para you write, ask "why should the Minister be interested in this?" "Would my language make sense to a Minister?"

3. It's about governance so once you select only those key ideals in democratic theory [e.g., participation] that relate to each of the tests [e.g., trust, readiness] that you'll be using ...that's why the Minister will be asking: " why are we concerned about this?" Each test should illustrate a/the democratic health ideal you've chosen. That way the briefing has coherence.

4. Make sure your presentation flows...try it on a friend! Does she get lost/bored? Is there a clear takeaway in her mind?

5. Don't blame. It is a two-way street: the Covenant concept requires maturity of citizens and government. How you present will determine if you are shown the door --- or invited back. You need not be argumentative at this point; it's a briefing after all. The more you can illustrate [and perhaps contend in your text or footnotes], the more I can sense if you understand how/why these tests are so prominent in the literature. :

6. Minor marking points: number your pages; include page # in your footnote/textnote, V means I think a reference is needed here; AWK means a expression is confusing or you are using "must" or an exhortation; SS is a sentence structure fault; SP is spelling error. I like sub/sideheads in a briefing. You must include on your paper a word count that excludes the bibliography or foot/end notes; failure to do so will result in a 2 mark deduction from your paper's grade .You may exceed or fall short of the specified word count by 5%; then 1 mark will be deducted from your grade for every 100 wds [or part] above or below this margin of 5%. Your Bibliography must use [not just list] the number of Course sources specified. Use Chicago bibliographic style for in-text citations. Also, Issue Notes are expected to be used.

Writing Assignments

1. Essay #1 2500 wds; due Jan 8 2014 [Draft: details and format TBD]

What factors covered in the Course literature account for reduced citizenship [define] in the current Canadian Democratic deficit, and why? -- Use at least 10 Course sources; start with your definition of democratic health.

2. Service-Learning Writing Assignments

a) Overview

All the students in POL494 will consider the elements of citizenship from a community point of view. To buttress/test the Class presentations, students will perform 20 service hours in the community supporting groups engaged in social and civic development primarily through bridging and trust-building among contending views. Staff of the Centre for Community Partnerships [www.ccp.utoronto.ca] will secure placements and, with your TA, coach the Class in successful service-learning. See the CCP Handbook for details of balloting for, and interacting with, your Partner. You will then write about your insights, from a Course diagnostic, in Reflections and the Final Essay [#2]

b) Reflections

In this Course, reflections are the primary means through which students connect their service-learning experiences with Course learning objectives. They are critical components of service-learning in that they "enable learners to examine and form their beliefs, values, opinions, assumptions, judgments and practices related to an action or experience, gain a deeper understanding of them and construct their own meaning and significance for future actions." [J. Moon 1999 Reflection in Learning and Professional Development]

The reflections you'll be asked to complete are for the Course, not for your community partner – in the same way as you'd read a text about POL494 issues. It is to assist you in your personal as well as academic development. During your placement we ask, below, some course-generated diagnostic reflections, and then, in your final briefing-note Essay #2, we again ask you to apply your service-learning experience to Course material. Since the Course progresses through four themes: trust, efficacy, engagement and problem-solving, your service-learning reflections will assist you in grounding your concluding Essay #2 in real terms.

You will submit, by email, three Reflections, completed in the order of the questions below; your due dates will be established by you once you start your placement. Our evaluation of your Reflections will be based on how well you are able to relate your service-learning experiences to Course concepts and theories. Comments, by email, on your reflections will be provided -- so that we can see improvements in subsequent Reflections or the final Essay. Your weekly reflections should each be 1-2 single-spaced pages in length and can be submitted to me by email (j.hove@utoronto.ca). Please use ONLY your UTORmail.

There are three ways that you can collect the information you need in order to answer the Reflection questions: 1) by evaluating the content of the work you are doing (for example, what you have learned from attending a meeting, conducting a jurisdiction scan or a literature review, mapping stakeholders, or conducting fieldwork); 2) by evaluating the work environment of the organization for which you are providing service; and 3) [if you are unable to gather the information you need from the other means] by conducting an interview with your community partner to get their perspective on the question you must answer for your Reflections.

c) Format of Reflection

The aim of the reflections below is to prompt you in thinking about how to apply your service-learning experiences and observations as evidence when analyzing Course themes. Your reflections, therefore, should be analytical and diagnostic, not descriptive or anecdotal. Please ensure that you respond to the questions posed and/or address each requirement of the reflections. When completing your reflections, please use the following tips:

- Written reflections may be in point form but must consist of properly constructed sentences.
- Do not describe your placement in minute detail but rather in broad patterns.
- The aim is “reflection,” to your best ability, on your service-learning experiences and observations as they relate to the themes of the Course. Not all of you will be able to do this equally well if you end up licking envelopes. If this is the case, we suggest that you arrange a meeting with your sponsor to explore their organization’s activities from the POL494 perspective. [You would have signalled this option in your Contract email]

We suggest you organize your reflections according to the bolded items, below, [as sideheads] and take care to bold Course terms as they are used in your paras. Please consult Key Diagnostic Terms in this Syllabus (pp. 7-8).

d) Stages of Reflections

There are two stages of reflection: prior to the start of your placement (reflection 1), and as your placement progresses (reflections 2 and 3).

1. First week of placement commencement: Stages in political development

Locate your placement on your map of pre-political through to post-political arrangements. Explain why you have located it as such, and what arena(s) of citizen engagement the organization is seeking to build/influence/express [i.e. social, civic, and/or political] engagement. Identify likely stakeholders and suggest how the way you have located your placement might affect the voice of discussion among stakeholders [strategic, rule-guided, or communicative].

Reflection #1 should be based on on-line research and conversation with your community partner at your orientation meeting. Rely more heavily on conversation with your partner if on-line information (website, newspaper articles, policy documents, etc) about your organization is lacking or if your service work has not informed this question.

2. Mid-Placement: symptoms of democratic deficit

What symptoms of reduced citizenship or democratic deficit is your community partner seeking to address? Refer to points 7-12, 16 and 17 of the Key Diagnostic Terms in the syllabus (pp. 7-8) and identify 3 symptoms. Explain how you have observed these symptoms in relation to the community affected by your partner’s work, and/or the policy issue(s) in question. Provide concrete examples from your service-learning.

Reflection #2 should be based on your service experiences with the organization or interviews with your community partner.

3. Final week of placement: Democratic renewal

What strategies does your community partner employ to encourage democratic renewal and or community (re)development? How do they accord with Course themes? [Refer to points 13, 14, 16, 17, or 19 in Key Diagnostic Terms, as applicable.] What obstacles or complications have you observed or can anticipate? Please provide specific example for your service-learning.

Reflection 3 should be based on your service experiences with the organization or interviews with your community partner.

3. Essay #2 3500 wds: due April 2 2014
[Draft: details and format TBD]

This is a Minister's presentation: you will be expected to apply your service-learning experiences and observations as evidence when analyzing Course themes. For this reason, the reflections that you complete prior to submitting your final briefing-note essay are critical steps through which to sharpen your insights.

a) Based upon your placement, and using a Briefing Note format, answer the following:

- using at least 50% of the Course diagnostics terms [pp. 7-8] what did you learn about this particular community (issues and challenges, resources and knowledge, priorities and values)?
 - from what Course perspective is it best to analyse citizen engagement in this community?
 - which symptoms of democratic decline or renewal did you observe?
 - what community assets did you witness?
 - what is the organization's approach/guiding principles/role in community mediation?
- which Course concepts did you see most clearly in practice? (For each one, provide examples.)
- what were the barriers encountered in the "real world"?
- what did you learn about meeting and overcoming challenges, or capitalizing on resources?

- b) Explain whether one of the following initiatives might be applied to the community:
[or c) Explain the reasons for adopting as a remedy for citizenship deficit the following]
- ABCD
 - eDemocracy
 - Deliberative democracy
 - Improved education
 - ASD/Social Economy

Students with an inapplicable placement will write the essay on "c)" alone

Essay #2 Appendix

As Appendices to your briefing-note Essay #2, please include the following:

a) Descriptive data

Service-learning for which organization _____
Contact Person _____
Focus of organization _____
Nature of task (in max of 2 sentences) _____
Venue _____
Total Hours _____
Committee or individual work _____
Was the task: ___ face-to-face; ___ on line; ___ literature review; ___ data manipulation; ___ observation?
How was your time spent? ___% data/document manipulation; ___% listening/recording ___% facilitation ___% interviewing ___% other

b) a Copy of your thank-you email to your service-learning Partner

c) the Log of your service-learning hours

4. Partner assessment of your professionalism

A professionalism evaluation (see pg. 20) will be sent to your service-learning Partner. Their assessment of your conduct and professionalism will count towards 5% of your final grade.

5. Marking scheme

Please pay close attention to this protocol and alert us to any variations in your placements. Rules in POL 494, to be fair to all students, are strictly enforced and reflect on your professionalism.

20% of your final grade is assigned to service-learning reflections as above (3 x 5%), and participation in service-learning class discussions (5%). Reflections are to be submitted over the course of your placement, as outlined above. Since service-learning schedules are variable, you must email the TA after your orientation meeting with your community partner to establish three deadlines for your reflections. Deadlines must follow this format:

- Reflection 1: submitted in the first week of your placement.
- Reflection 2: submitted mid-placement.
- Reflection 3: submitted in the final week of your placement.

Reflections submitted after the established deadlines will accrue the normal penalty of 5% per 24 hrs or part, including weekends. Moreover, in accordance with these parameters, reflections will not be accepted after Dec. 1, 2013 for students completing their service-learning in the fall semester; or after Mar. 1, 2014 for students completing their service-learning in the winter semester.

There will be two types of service-learning class discussions: 1) one pre-class discussion in each of the fall and winter for those students completing service learning at the time; and 2) two in-class service-learning discussions for all students to be held in January following completion of fall service-learning placements, and in March following completion of winter service-learning placements. Your grade will be based on your attendance and participation in these class discussions. Students will be expected to share their insights and experiences, and ask questions of their peers, in the two in-class discussions.

Essay Presentations and format will follow the instructions re Briefing Note style provided in Issue Note #1 [Sept 11]

Service-Learning

Service-learning achieves three objectives: information acquired outside the classroom or textbook; support for a community partner where the student is placed; exposure for the student to civic service and leadership. Civic learning encompasses a wide range of possible outcomes, from personal character development such as respect, empathy, ability to work with others, etc.; to skills for active engagement in community life, such as running meetings, organizing projects, etc.; to understanding the social, political, and economic root causes of social issues; among others [Howard, 2001; Westheimer & Kahne, 2004].

One caution: Service-learning has “the liberal bias of higher education...it promotes a highly partisan orientation towards, for example, what it means to help the needy, what this help might look like and who should be at the forefront of such societal changes...To put it bluntly, service-learning practices do not usually promote a perspective of trickle-down economics favoured by neo-conservatives.” [D. Butin, Service Learning in Higher Education, p. 100]

In November or February [TBC], all the students in POL 494 will have a community partner placement and be able to consider the elements of democratic deficit in a real-time community setting. To buttress/test the Class presentations students will perform 20 service hours in the community, supporting groups engaged in social and civic development. This may be at the early stages of: political self awareness, issue/stakeholder mapping, issue conceptualization and acquiring “voice”, experiencing barriers, or bridging and trust-building among contending view. Staff of the Centre for Community Partnerships [www.ccp.utoronto.ca] and our Course TA will secure/assign placements and coach the Class in successful Service-Learning.

Typical past placements:

- MassLPB: facilitate stakeholder consultation on district health priorities
- Regent Park: literature search on world techniques at social cohesion and proposals
- Regent Park: minute community reactions to community gardens project
- Regent Park: community mapping of community organizations and interview
- Lawrence Heights: literature survey on revitalization in other jurisdictions + stakeholder interviews
- City of Mississauga: new Celebration Square cttee: advice on composition, mandate and governance
- Toronto Police Service Board: advice, consultations on complaints process
- Lake Wilcox: community retrofit plan: messaging and facilitated community events
- pool closures in Public Schools
- Better Ballots: website design on alternative electoral systems
- Toronto Election Services: reformed voting proposals

Submitting papers

Please ensure you understand the following rules. Your compliance demonstrates your scholarship and maturity. These provisions are strictly enforced. Any exception must be arranged with the Instructor and confirmed in writing. All work submitted to the Instructor will be marked; however, the grade entered on the student's record will depend on the following provisions.

Students should always hand on-time papers directly to the Instructor; don't trust it to a friend. Essays are due at the time specified; essays overdue by even one minute are deemed late and will have to be submitted to the Political Science Office, Room 3018, Sidney Smith Hall, and time stamped. Late penalties will accrue until a hard copy of the paper is received and is time stamped by the Pol Sci Dept. No paper can be accepted after Term is completed. Late papers incur a penalty of 5 marks per "day" late, or part thereof until the end of Term; a "day" extends from the due date/time [Monday 6:10pm] to Office closing the next day and similar closings until you submit, including weekends [you may submit to my home].

Students should NEVER leave a paper in an Instructor's university mailbox; this is an excellent way to have your paper go missing and end up with a zero. Unless otherwise arranged with the Instructor essays can NOT BE SUBMITTED by fax, e-mail or other electronic means. Students are responsible for keeping a hard copy of their papers handed into the Department and retaining them until a final grade is assigned. Please back up your work as you are writing it! Do NOT work on/discuss/share drafts of your essay with classmates.

To be fair to all students, exemptions from non-attendance penalties or extensions for handing in written assignments are considered ONLY in cases of DOCUMENTED medical problems or of DOCUMENTED immediate* family emergencies [*parents, siblings, children]. There are NO extensions issued for problems of time management, conflicts with other courses, part-time work, technical problems, delayed transit or holidays. Students should notify the Instructor as soon as possible in advance of any deadline of a request for extension. You will help your cause if you alert us right away about your problem; don't tell us after the due date.

Documentation must be precise. It must be the original of the UofT medical; note, not a copy nor a clinic Rx form. According to the A&S Calendar (www.artsandscience.utoronto.ca/ofr/calendar/rules.htm#petitions): "the physician's report must establish that the patient was examined and diagnosed at the time of illness, not after the fact. The Faculty will not accept a statement that merely confirms a report of illness made by the student for documentation by the physician. General ailments such as 'gastroenteritis', 'headaches' or 'muscle aches' for which we receive a note from different walk-in clinics are rarely acceptable".

It remains at the Instructor's discretion whether or not to accept a late assignment. DO NOT ASSUME IT ON YOUR PART. You will help your cause if you alert us right away about your problem; don't tell us after the deadline. Extensions are entirely at the discretion of the Instructor and are proportionate to his judgement of the crisis. For example, a doctor's note indicating the student has had the flu merely indicates that the final version of the paper may have been affected, not that the two weeks to research and prepare the paper should be granted. Illness on the due date should not require any more preparation time. If in doubt about these provisions, please consult the Instructor in advance. These provisions are strictly enforced.

. Please use the Chicago Bibliographic style for in-text citations. <http://www.writing.utoronto.ca/advice/using-sources/documentation>

Double space your text: Number your pages; include page # in your footnote/textnote. You must include on your paper a word count that excludes the bibliography or foot/end notes; failure to do so will result in a 2 mark deduction from your paper's grade. You may exceed or fall short of the paper's wordage by 5%; then 1 mark will be deducted from your grade for every 100 wds [or part] above or below this margin of 5%.

Marking will include the following: "V" means I think a reference is needed here; AWK means a expression is confusing or you are using "must" or an exhortation; SS is a sentence fault; SP is spelling error. Sideheads are helpful as signposts. Forgetting your biblio will result in 5 marks deduction.

If you have the printer capacity, please print double-sided.

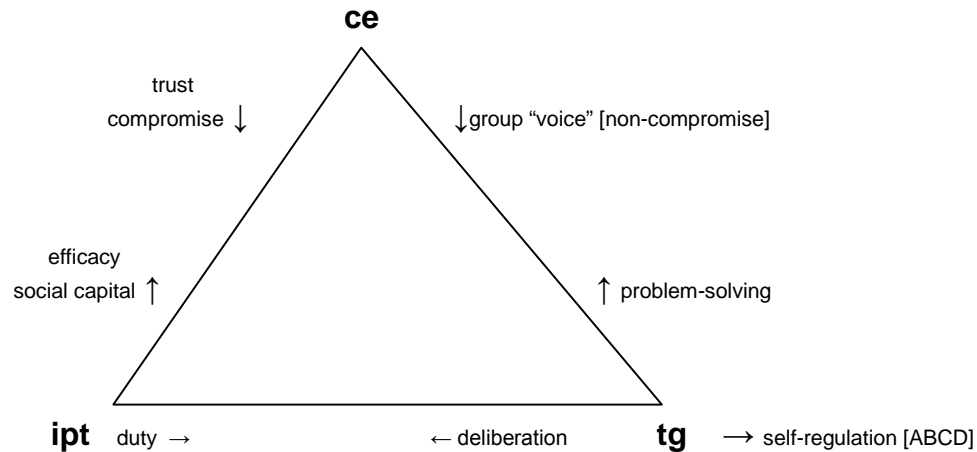

You as a policy Doctor: moving to a no-deficit scenario

Citizenship sits within the larger democratic map; what is the remedial path to a lessened democratic deficit?

See the triangle below: we are looking for a sense of efficacy, leading to engagement, producing reciprocal trust [horizontal and vertical] resulting in co-operative problem-solving

How to get there:

Promote through social capital [anti-individualism, covenants and rule-following]; engagements [s,c,p] that build confidence; broaden elitism through voice; de-concentrate power through self-regulation; overcome episodic citizenship through duty; reduce minority or majority tyranny through compromise; and pursue reasoned and accountable deliberation [social cohesion, inclusion and rights are end results]

Course Framing: The diagnostic challenge

1. The symptoms

The medical question for the body politic is: “is there a democratic deficit; what causes, and remedies it”? Often there is a set of unwellness indicators [e.g., low voting, low sense of efficacy, low bridging] leading to “don’t know”/ “don’t care” symptoms, heightened by the excessive individualism of the post-materialism age which leads to not relating [bonding or bridging]. We see this as primarily an attitudinal deficit: people and governments lack the disposition to trust, and hence each gives up on the other.

One starts by identifying low trust in government and in the public:

- there is an “attitudinal deficit”: lack of norms, reciprocity, trust and no sense of a “common good”; the public can’t be trusted to be rational [Yankelovich]; government can’t be trusted to give public a “voice” [Phillips]
- there is a gap between what Canadians expect of their political institutions in terms of democratic governance and what they perceive as reality: the increased concentration of power in the hands of the few – the PM and his court; the political influence of a business elite/special interests, and the lack of MP accountability with their failure to act as delegates [Aucoin]

We next identify a low sense of efficacy [Nevitte/Patten]:

- the inability of citizens to have more than an episodic influence on the conduct of Parliament
- the downsizing of the state to NGO’s puts too many policy-significant administrative decisions beyond democratic politics
- an atomistic view of society, with market/experts on top, such that political society is seen as an aggregation of individuals – group politics is dismissed as special pleadings
- the politics of cultural recognition is attacked as being incapable of acting in the “national interest”, promoting set asides, privileges for the few, and the politics of minoritization

- voting is non-rational; there is no reward for acting rationally

We'll identify low citizenship/duty – rights not accompanied by responsibilities--[Putnam] with a lack of interest and involvement in the political process; and moral individualism:

“To work properly, liberal democracy has always been dependent on certain shared cultural values. The tendency of contemporary liberal democracies to fall prey to excessive individualism is perhaps their greatest long term vulnerability.... There are serious problems with a culture of unbridled individualism in which the breaking of rules and tradition becomes in a sense the only remaining rule. The first has to do with the fact that moral values and social rules are not simply arbitrary constraints on individual choice but the preconditions for any kind of co-operative enterprise. ... Individuals amplify their own powers by following co-operative rules that constrain their freedom of choice because these also allow them to communicate with others and to co-ordinate their actions”. [Fukuyama]

2. The points of inquiry [what do we measure to gauge health?]

We'll then look at elements of the attitudinal deficits at the three stages of governance:

- a) the pre-political stage where social cohesion, social capital, and trust promote civic awareness of a quality of governance and responsibilities. We assessed whether this is a social or legislated phenomenon.
- b) the political stage of governance -- where citizen-government dialogue is critical here. But is there citizen “readiness” – how informed, rational, adaptable an input can they be and, will there be “reciprocity” by government offering different stages and depths of “consultation”?
- c) the post governance stage by which is meant the point at which government is willing to release rule-making to others [off/downloading]. This post-deliberation “co-governance” may involve using the 3rd sector, corporatism or maybe even communities.

3. Treatment/Recovery

Next we'll move onto the recovery stage: We have started a broad-scale review of a road to recovery – always remembering we are briefing a minister with re-election in mind, no $$, and maxed out on rights language in the Charter.

- a) we asked whether the 3rd sector could help at all three stages
- b) we'll explore whether the 1st sector can and does enhance reciprocity and access at the political stage or would be willing to enter a post political stage [ABCD] of community self-development
- c) at the same political stage we'll look at whether there is political readiness on the part of the “citizen” and what can be expected of him/her to be informed, rational and open to compromise. Within this diagnostic we'll ask whether education hurts or helps civic engagement, whether diversity is a problem, whether Gen X is a problem, whether “citizenship” is too narrow, and whether public judgement, not just public opinion, is realistic.
- d) then we'll move on to look at the realities of groups having “voice”; how to “deliver” co-governance to communities; what are community dynamics; and whether the legal system [courts] can actually deliver a win=win democratic-like compromise in legal matters of rights. We will return to reality with a sober examination of why elites always win -- or whether they must.

Recovery: mapping our actions

Pre-political [social, civic engagement]

- political involvement is pre-determined by social and civic associations
- how much social capital and social cohesion do we have?
 - social capital is highest in smaller settings, homogeneity fosters trust, shared experiences/language, easier tacit communications, fosters mutuality, face-to-face
 - for power, tho, density, large scale matters; smaller can be parochial, NIMBY, pro inertia
 - federating help facilitate both: bridging and mixing of homogeneous groups
 - to overcome tough bridging use common spaces/events [fairs]; creative and performing arts/religion best at bringing together the ethnically diverse

Political [political engagement]

- enhanced citizen involvement requires citizenship skills first
- what is the status of political readiness and political reciprocity?
 - encourage public opinion to become public judgement?
 - provide routine possibilities for participation and connection

Post-political [grassroots empowerment]

- governance does not mean only “government” but handbacks
- what’s the disposition to co-governance?
 - decentralized gov’t fosters access, human-scale, comprehensibility, training, co-decisionmaking
 - reuse existing social networks [libraries/schools], friendships [churches] to build self-reliance
 - create common spaces: building, parks, newspapers, internet, opportunities for encounters to encourage overlap of interests and ‘multi strandedness’ [that’s why chatrooms and designer TV channels are so bad as you will not encounter the unexpected/unfamiliar]
 - create new spaces/events for recognition, connection, conversation [street parties, arts centres]

Glossary of Terms re the Democratic Deficit

Body politic is a metaphor. It suggests that a nation is considered to be an organic whole like human body with government as the head of state, and includes the citizens, public servants and corporation as other anatomical parts. Analogies can be made between the supposed causes of human disorders and their equivalents in the political field. See Hobbes.

Democracy

Democracy: Modern political democracy is a system of governance in which rulers are held accountable for their actions in the public realm by citizens, acting indirectly through the competition and cooperation of their elected representatives [Schmitter]

Direct democracy: direct links between elected officials and citizen that give them greater unmediated control through referenda, recall, e-democracy; greatest accountability but episodic, except for e-democracy

Representative democracy [voting]: formal mediated expression of citizen interests with greater accuracy in expression and more effectiveness/consistency in MP representation; accountable but episodic.

Associational democracy [interest aggregation]: voluntary CSOs [family, faith, interest, ideology] that perform a role of: service delivery, advocacy, and citizenship-building [social capital] role. May be elite driven or resolved; ongoing process but fitful

Deliberative democracy [iterative deliberation]: face-to-face inclusive reasoning among citizens and with public officials; accountability. Unlike CSO advocacy it is considering together different points of view and coming to a reasoned decision [not elite driven or resolved]; may be episodic or ongoing.

E-Democracy denotes using IT in political and governance processes for broader and more active citizen participation. But since it is virtual membership/deliberation in a self-selected community if "belonging" as a part of social cohesion denotes "...to a local community in term of face-to-face contact [Jenson p. 19; also Putnam, ch. 9], this element is lacking.

Social Capital

[from www.cfsv.org/communitysurvey]

It's the store of goodwill in a organization, community or association that permits people to get along or get ahead

Social capital describes networks, norms and trust that make possible collective action. Civic engagement may generate this condition – it is impossible to legislate it [See Jenson pp. 26-27].

Among literally hundreds of different measures of social capital in the Social Capital Community Benchmark Survey, some people (or communities) broadly are more (or less) socially connected. People with lots of friends are more likely to vote more, to attend church more often, and to bowl in leagues. This means that you can speak of a person (or a community) as being generally high (or low) in social capital. On the other hand, closer examination reveals different sub-dimensions (comparable to the difference between mathematical, verbal, emotional, and spatial intelligence).

What follows is a brief description of different facets of social capital ... There are two dimensions of "social trust" (whether you trust others), two measures of political participation, two measures of civic leadership and associational involvement ...

Trust

Social trust at the core of social capital is the question of whether you can trust other people. Often this trust is forged with specific people through common participation in groups, associations, and activities. Nevertheless, when this trust transcends from trust of specific individuals to generalized trust, it is extraordinarily valuable. Much like cash is more efficient than barter (because it eliminates the need to negotiate each transaction), generalized social trust is extremely important in lubricating social interaction and getting things accomplished. Our first index of social trust combines trust of people in one's neighborhood, coworkers, shop clerks, co-religionists, local police, and finally "most people."

Inter-racial trust: as we've discussed earlier, a critical challenge facing communities attempting to build social capital is the fact that it is simply harder to do in places that are more diverse. The measure of inter-racial trust looks at the extent to which different racial groups (whites, blacks, Hispanics, and Asians) trust one another and is thus one proxy for the health of inter-racial relations in a community.

Diversity of friendships: equally important to their levels of social trust are how diverse people's social networks are. These "bridging ties" are especially valuable in producing community solidarity and in forging a larger consensus on how communities need to change or work together.

Political participation

Conventional politics participation: One of the key measures for how engaged we are in communities is the extent to which we are involved politically... how many in our communities are registered to vote, actually vote, express interest in politics, are knowledgeable about political affairs and read the newspaper regularly?

Protest politics participation: The data in the Social Capital Community Benchmark Survey indicate that many communities that exhibit low levels of participation in conventional/electoral ways, nonetheless exhibit high levels of participation in protest forms, such as taking part in marches, demonstrations, boycotts, rallies, participating in groups that took action for local reform, participating in labour and ethnically-related groups. This dimension is a composite of those types of participation.

Civic leadership and associational involvement: Many people typically get involved locally by joining groups that they care about (be they veterans groups, sports groups, literary groups, or new age poetry clubs). We measured such engagement in three ways:

Civic Leadership: this is a composite measure both of how frequently respondents were engaged in groups, clubs and local discussions of town or school affairs, and also whether the respondent took a leadership role within these groups. Communities that rank high on this aspect of social capital benefit from a hum of civic activity.

Associational involvement: ... participation in the following types of groups: organizations affiliated with religion; sports clubs, leagues, or outdoor activities; youth organizations; parent associations or other school support groups; veterans groups; neighbourhood associations, seniors groups, charity or social welfare organizations, labour unions, trade, farm or business associations; service or fraternal organizations; ethnic, nationality, or civil rights organizations; political groups; literary, art, or musical groups; hobby, investment, or garden clubs; self-help programs; groups that meet only over the Internet; and any other type of groups or associations.

Informal socializing: While many communities (or individuals) are either higher or lower generally in social capital, some communities or individuals are more likely to develop social connections through formal memberships and associations ("machers") and others are more likely to develop these connections through informal friendships ("schmoozers"). While the "civic leadership" and "associational involvement" measured above capture the formal social ties, the "informal socializing" dimension measures the degree to which residents had friends-over to their home, hung out with friends in a public place, socialized with co-workers outside of work, played cards or board games with others, and visited with relatives

Social Cohesion

[from Jenson]

- shared values and commitment to community which comprises: belonging, inclusion, participation, recognition, legitimacy
- may be social or legislated [thru democratic dialogue, space for claims, reducing disparities in wealth and income – or at least equality of opportunity, enabling people to be engaged]
- social order may be a “consequence more of values than interests, of consensus more than conflict and of social practices more than political action [Jenson p. vii]
- social cohesion is : a process, a definition of who is in the community, shared values: a sense of commitment and a desire to live some part together,
- some turn to gov't; others to 3rd sector to foster: some see it as getting a job [social economy]. Some say democracy plays no role in fostering social order but rather markets, other private institutions including families, churches, so on.
- others say that in a plural society living with value conflicts is a product of institutions: social cohesion is a collective construct not just an aggregation of individual decisions

Common Good or Common Values – see discussion on p. 31, 38 of Jenson. Value diversity may be a hallmark of modernity and pluralism; the diversity per se may not be the problem but the management of conflict may be.

Common Good

[from Breton op.cit.]

A concern for the well-being of others; well-being = fairness in the functioning of society, recognition, trust in relationships with others; institutional trust, sense of belonging, mutual indebtedness, mutual obligations, and contributions to the functioning of society [p.177]

...favoured by those who are collectively oriented and not so much by those who are self-oriented [i.e., life as a personal project]... may be a concern for the common good but no feeling of personal responsibility for it...may need to be a shift from the “politics of identity” to the “politics of community” [p. 188]

The public sphere may be responsible for the common good: policies that determine the quality of life. Gov't is the one institution of which all citizens are members. Their power should be used to generate and mobilize resources to attain common goals ..goals that benefit society as a whole.

Reduced radius of trust

[from F. Fukuyama, Atlantic Monthly May 1999, p. 71]

Despite the decline in trust group memberships are increasing... but on a reduced radius of trust; the authority of most large organizations [e.g., church] has declined and the importance of a host of smaller organizations has grown [these are designer organizations] characterized by like-mindedness [chat rooms]. So there is the rise of interest groups at the price of broadly based political parties. So they choose low-cost-of-entry, low-consequence [non-consequential living] groups. Each “community” is thus a smaller circle than before and has little hold on its members. The rise of moral individualism means the “minaturization of community” [p. 72]

Communicative Action is the disposition to communicate across national, linguistic and ideological barriers to reach a mutual understanding based on people talking to and with each other, not at each other [Yankelovich p. 216]

Civic culture

[from Breton, A. A Fragile Social Fabric]

Includes a normative and social covenant among people, and with the state institutions, as to what individuals can expect from their society [rights] and their society can expect from them [responsibilities], e.g., fair treatment, full acceptance, respect, trust in dealings with others, social obligations, and recognition of their contribution to community. A market culture, based on individual[ism] accumulation, elevates private greed, self interest, self-reliance and perpetuates inequalities. [Although, oddly, even market transactions require social norms of trust/fairness/mutual obligations/fidelity but these are means, not ends]. [pp. 4-17]

“At an earlier period in our society’s history the church may have been the central guardian, preserving the civic culture and assuring the good functioning of society. Today, however, even though churches still have a role, governmental institutions have the primary responsibility to strengthen the social fabric and to deal with threats to its integrity.” [p. 16]

Covenant

Society relies on a social and normative infrastructure....The infrastructure involves an implicit covenant that defines what individuals can expect from the society and what society can expect from them. This covenant is part of the civic culture of the society.

The covenant defines what individuals can count on when dealing with each other and with institutions... such as full acceptance, respect, fair treatment and trust in dealing with others. these are ideals that people expect to see incorporated in public policies.

The covenant defines what the society and its institutions can count on in terms of inputs and responses from individuals in the pursuit of the common good. They define what people are willing to do to support each other and sustain the collective capacity to cope with ...problems

Thus membership entails obligations...members owe something to each other. The boundaries of membership identify those for whom one has a certain sense of responsibility...

This focus is relevant at a time when a pervasive market culture is eroding the civic culture underlying the social covenant....

Implicit is rejection of the view of society as merely a mass of individuals...simply engaged in economic transactions as consumers/taxpayers...[to] ...a conception of society as a set of interdependent people engaged in a multiplicity of different kinds of social relations and collective projects promoting: belonging, inclusion, participation, recognition, and legitimacy.

"... there is a worry that people no longer have a sense of higher purpose...[that they] lost the broader view because they focus on their individual lives" p. 8 Breton

When assessing the state of society it is therefore crucial that the society not be reduced to a marketplace with its material infrastructure. We need to take account of the quality of social relations among people and between individuals and the collectivities in which they live, quality being defined by the experience of fairness, trust, belonging, indebtedness, mutual obligations, and social contributions.

Citizenship

A sense of responsibility, not entitlement; an ability to tolerate each other; a desire to participate in political process to seek and promote public good, willingness to show self-restraint. People fail at citizenship not because they are apathetic but because they do not think their action or views make any real difference

Citizen/political readiness is the citizen's capacity and willingness to engage in politics using public judgement, not just public opinion

Social engagement: participation in an affinity group for mutual self-benefit [ski club]

Civic engagement: citizen participation in non-political, non-market civic organizations for civic betterment [Rotary]

Political engagement: membership in a political party or action group for the purpose of changing or initiating public policy [Liberals Greenpeace]

Political Engagement

[from Cameron]

maybe it's just limited participation in citizen responsibilities: voting, paying attn to public issues, attending formal political events and working on campaign not just choosing a political representative and influencing them, but going beyond to deliberative democracy or public judgement:

OR

- either as individuals or groups
- initiated by gov't, 3rd sector or individual
- adequate advanced info
- open process, facilitated
- long enough to permit deliberation, not just a "consultation"
- accountable process, feedback about decisions and disengagement may not mean unengagement but re-engagement elsewhere [p. 24].

Gidengil says "the same people who grassroots/protests are the same who vote" p.173

Social Learning: Voluntarism

Occurs in one's lifetime through

- youth civic activity
- religious affiliation
- civic participation
- parenting
- informal helping

Social Values

Volunteering is more a product of social dynamics than of one single motive or sense of individualistic gain.

Social reasoning is rooted in six possible values:

- Fulfilling an interest [instrumentalist]
 - Helping others [altruist]
 - Improving the world [idealist]
 - Kids [familist]
 - Meeting people [connectors]
 - Building community services [supporters]
- [See Laforest & Reed The Social Logic of Contributory Behaviour]

→ is derived from a context called [pro]social embeddedness

Social Embeddedness [Reed & Selbee Distinguishing Characteristics of Active Volunteers 2000]

Is the link to one's social context; consists of: social connectivity, social continuity, social anchoring.

a) social connectedness

Measures the breadth of a person's involvement in the "community"; is an index of the degree to which people are involved in their community: membership in civic associations, interaction with family and friends, church attendance, length of residence in the community, number of organizations volunteered for, informal helping

Proximate connectivity: entails awareness of and attention to a limited radius of individuals and groups; mainly family or affinity group → informal volunteering

Extended connectivity: attention to a radius of individuals and groups beyond one's immediate social world; e.g., membership in civic organizations, religious groups, service clubs → formal volunteering

Exposure to connectivity determines volunteering: needs, causes, acquaintances, requests, directly related to level of connectivity but hard to find consistent significance among volunteers

b) social continuity

Assessment of the length of time one enjoys same job, friends, marriage, residence positively correlated with a disposition to volunteer.

c) social anchoring

The extent of value, beliefs, life-ordering principles

Individual's other-directed considerations: awareness/respect for beliefs, values, needs, feelings of others determined by his involvement in a specific socio-political context; he is NOT just a possessive individualist. Politics is a feature of the ties of citizens to each other; not just an upwards link of individuals to government in a methodological individualism. Modern citizenship is not just a vertical reciprocal relationship between government - individuals; citizens are horizontally, politically interdependent. Collective action includes conceptions of the common good and one's responsibility to the collective. Compliance, participation, collective action, and public opinion are a feature of social anchoring.

Signs of social anchoring are:

- Recognition of a civic or communal good
- Belief in necessity of active personal involvement in contributing to the common good
- A worldview that is universalistic, inclusive, trusting and prosocial rather than individualistic [see Caldwell & Reed Civic Participation in Canada on the absence of a worldview in Quebec, pp. 221 –222]
- A worldview that sees individuals as interconnected
- A "culture of coherence" which recognizes the connection of the individual to others in society rooted in religion and republicanism
- A heightened sense of social responsibility

So, three characteristics of social embeddedness produce:

- Basis for shared meanings,

- Fosters awareness and support for collective good
- Increases likelihood of concerted action
- Provides basis for concerns re fairness/justice
- Greater adaptability to social change and social heterogeneity

Third, voluntary Sector – organizations neither gov't [1st sector] or business [2nd sector] that provide charitable social services for needy others, often largely volunteer driven; most revenue from donations although some gov't fund for delivering programs; independent of government, non-profit; other- not self-help: no return to the donor

Social Economy -- Another name for [part of] the third sector; those self-help social associations that produce services for members with economic benefit [unions, housing/daycare co-ops, caisses, mutuals, Scouts, YMCA, arts organizations]; often [membership] fee is paid and any profits ploughed back. A very diffuse term: Google <<social economy OISE>>.

Reciprocity

Political reciprocity is the capacity/willingness of government to accept and engage citizen deliberative input. "Recapturing citizen engagement without political reform is a mug's game. The forces distancing citizens from conventional politics are far too powerful for that. In any case, it is not the duty of citizens to bend themselves to the needs of political institutions but the responsibility of institutions and political leaders to adapt themselves to what their people require" [p. 44 Cameron]

Culture of technical control stresses information not judgement: the policy decision depends on highly specialized knowledge and skills; that only experts possess this knowledge; the voters are apathetic to issues not directly affecting their pocketbook interests; that where the public does have a view it is accurately reflected in public opinion; that elected official represent the view of the public well; that public "education", where experts share their information with the voter will do if consultation is "mandatory"; the media can impart the information and understanding the public needs; [paraphrased, p. 9]

Corporate influence

"70% of Canadians feel that our country is run by a few big interest looking out only for themselves"

"Canadian believe that the actions of the corporate elite are among the most significant determinants of social fragility" [p.182.Breton]. Gov't leaders are seen as influenced primarily by large corporations and the wealthy rather than by citizens.

Public opinion is a snapshot of non-reflective thinking in the abstract conceived at the time of the out-of-context question [Yankelovich, p. 5-6] ...it becomes public judgement when the public accepts responsibility for the consequences of its view... [p.24]

Public judgement is a state of highly developed public opinion that exits once people have engaged an issue, considered it from all sides, understood the choices it leads to and accepted the full consequences of the choices they make [p. 6] [Yankelovich. p. 24]

Good data alone does not make good choices: it involves the world of values, ethics, politics and life philosophies [p.7]

Government consultation exercises: "citizen consultation" asks for citizen input on one or more policy options; "citizen engagement" invites citizens to policy table before options are developed [Aucoin/Turnbull; see also BC Auditor's Report]

Co-governance -- the sharing of the state's authority to govern among different public decisionmaking assemblies

A Community needs [charity] model of recovery tends to encourage the notion that individual projects are a substitute for focusing on larger structural, community capacity building issues; It focuses on "needs" "problems" and "deficiencies". It often separates people into "helpers" from "helped" and sets up a relationship where the perceivably helpless people are targets for good and virtuous works of mercy and compassion by the more "privileged" members of society.

Community development is more a way of thinking and acting than a specific activity or program. It is based on values and beliefs such as participation, empowerment, mutual respect, and reciprocity. Communities speak and self-discover and self-remedy

From Cameron, D. "The Landscape of Civic Engagement in Ontario" Report for Cabinet Office Aug 2002

From the point of view of our inquiry into civic engagement, what we would wish to draw the reader's attention to is that each of the conceptualizations of social capital is preoccupied with the sphere of the social world that lies beyond the political and the economic, and the character of human relations that obtain within that sphere. Less explicit in the definitions themselves, but very much a working assumption supporting most of the writing on social capital, is the belief that there is a relationship between the state of social capital in a region or country and the quality of its government. Robert Putnam, based on his study of regional governments in Italy, asserts the link baldly, when he states that "good government in Italy is a by-product of singing groups and soccer clubs."⁴⁴

Social cohesion is an idea that came into broad use in western countries in the last decade and a half. It speaks to the disquiet observers and policy makers feel about the atomizing and alienating effects of recent political and economic practices, which have diminished the supportive role of the government and left people more to their own individual devices. While satisfied with the fiscal and economic benefits that have come with the implementation of a range of programs reflecting neo-liberal beliefs about state and market, officials and analysts have been less content with what appear to be the negative social impacts of these changes. It is in this context that a number of international organizations, such as the OECD, and many western countries began to concern themselves with social cohesion. A 1997 OECD working group claimed that social cohesion "raises questions about our current grim realities," and asked the following questions: "Why is it that we can no longer, as we could yesterday, live together in accordance with our common values? How can we reinvent for tomorrow our ability to live successfully together?"⁴⁵

Several of the definitions that we will mention below reveal the extent to which there is overlap with social capital theory. The main difference appears to be that social cohesion theorists tend to focus on the desired social outcomes of integration and the sharing of values, while students of social capital are more inclined to concentrate on the elements and processes, such as trust and reciprocity, that give rise to a shared sense of fate and identity. Here are several definitions of social cohesion, taken from Jane Jenson's thoughtful monograph on the subject.⁴⁶ The first is from the working group of the Commissariat general du Plan of the French government:

"Social cohesion is a set of social processes that help instil in individuals the sense of belonging to the same community and the feeling that they are recognised as members of that community."

The second is from the Government of Canada's Policy Research Sub-Committee on Social Cohesion. Social cohesion, the Committee asserts, is:

"The ongoing process of developing a community of shared values, shared challenges and equal opportunity within Canada, based on a sense of trust, hope and reciprocity among all Canadians."

Jenson identifies five dimensions of social cohesion in the work of those who write about the concept:

Belonging, which involves shared values and feeling part of the same community;

Inclusion especially, the opportunity to participate in the economic life of the country

Participation especially political participation

Recognition of difference and the inevitable pluralism associated with modern life; and,

Legitimacy, meaning that the social, economic and political institutions of the modern state are acknowledged by its citizens to be authoritative and valid.

Acknowledging that social cohesion is a contested concept, Jenson makes the point that exponents of this understanding of society are inclined to see social order "as the consequence of values more than interests, of consensus more than conflict, and of social practices more than political action," and that an agenda based on this model risks down playing claims for social justice and recognition, a point of particular significance for a pluralistic modern democracy like Canada.⁴⁷

Daniel Yankelovich has developed the idea of public judgement to get at one of the central deficiencies of modern representative government, and how it could be improved.⁴⁸ He is concerned with the distance that has developed between citizens and those who influence or wield political power in the state -elected representatives, senior bureaucrats, policy elites, opinion makers and the like. He contends that the gulf between the citizen and his or her representative, and the frustration the public feels with politicians and the political process are understandable, when one takes account of the inequality between the two.

The governing elites in a society spend much of their time and effort engaged in attending an informal 'policy university', that is, a world of conferences, think tanks, policy journals, discussion groups and so forth, in which sustained analysis and conversation is carried on with respect to the major public issues the society is confronting. This deep, continuing discourse, informs the policy preferences of members of this group.

The citizen, on the other hand, has none of these advantages, and is not creatively invited by the policy elites to participate in this ongoing process. The citizen is expected to vote in general elections, but not do much of the other democratic work associated with the healthy political existence of the community. When he or she is suddenly called upon for broader participation, little information and less time for consideration and discussion

F. Fukuyama “Social Capital and Civil Society” 1999 IMF Conference on Second Generation Reforms

Another way of approaching this question is through the concept of the "radius of trust." All groups embodying social capital have a certain radius of trust, that is, the circle of people among whom cooperative norms are operative. If a group's social capital produces positive externalities, the radius of trust can be larger than the group itself. It is also possible for the radius of trust to be smaller than the membership of the group, as in large organizations that foster cooperative norms only among the group's leadership or permanent staff. A modern society may be thought of as a series of concentric and overlapping radii of trust. These can range from friends and cliques up through NGOs and religious groups.

Virtually all forms of traditional culture -- social groups like tribes, clans, village associations, religious sects, etc. --are based on shared norms and use these norms to achieve cooperative ends. The literature on development has not, as a general rule, found social capital in this form to be an asset; it is much more typically regarded as a liability. Economic modernization was seen as antithetical to traditional culture and social organizations, and would either wipe them away or else be itself blocked by forces of traditionalism. Why should this be so, if social capital is genuinely a form of capital?

The reason, in my view, has to do with the fact that such groups have a narrow radius of trust. In-group solidarity reduces the ability of group members to cooperate with outsiders, and often imposes negative externalities on the latter. For example, in the Chinese parts of East Asia and much of Latin America, social capital resides largely in families and a rather narrow circle of personal friends. It is difficult for people to trust those outside of these narrow circles. Strangers fall into a different category than kin; a lower standard of moral behavior applies when one becomes, for example, a public official. This provides cultural reinforcement for corruption: in such societies, one feels entitled to steal on behalf of one's family.

Traditional social groups are also afflicted with an absence of what Mark Granovetter calls "weak ties," that is, heterodox individuals at the periphery of the society's various social networks who are able to move between groups and thereby become bearers of new ideas and information. Traditional societies are often segmentary, that is, they are composed of a large number of identical, self-contained social units like villages or tribes. Modern societies, by contrast, consist of a large number of overlapping social groups that permit multiple memberships and identities. Traditional societies have fewer opportunities for weak ties among the segments that make it up, and therefore pass on information, innovation, and human resources less easily.

Civic Engagement, Trust, and Democracy

The civil society / social capital literature offers a potential explanation for civic disengagement that warrants careful consideration and empirical investigation. The basic argument is as follows: advanced industrialized nations, particularly the United States, have in recent years experienced a decline in the quality of civil society. This decline is manifested in decreasing levels of associational membership and a tendency away from recreational activities in groups. With this decline of civic engagement comes a decline in interpersonal trust. The existence of a relationship between civic engagement and interpersonal trust is predicated on the assumption that involvement in the life of the community instils in individuals the habits and practices of cooperation. Those who are engaged in the community, according to this theory, are more likely to be predisposed to trust others, and assume that others will behave according to a sort of unwritten code enshrining norms of reciprocity. Trust, in turn, is necessary to a functioning democracy. Numerous empirical studies conducted over the past forty years have shown a correlation between interpersonal trust and the persistence of democratic institutions. According to Brehm and Rahn, '[t]hese norms [of reciprocity] become part of a community's social capital, allowing people to make inferences about the intentions of others even when direct knowledge about them is unavailable. Generalized trust allows people to move out of familiar relationships in which trust is based on knowledge accumulated from long experience with particular people. If outcomes in a democracy are inherently uncertain ...such global trust may be necessary in order for people to support democratic arrangements. From this notion, it is clear that declining trust could potentially affect confidence in and willingness to engage with democratic governance.

The past decade has witnessed a resurgence of interest among social scientists studying industrialized democracies in the idea of 'civil society' and 'social capital.' There are several reasons for this resurgence of interest; they include influence from scholars studying the importance of civil society in democratization processes in Eastern Europe and developing nations, and the publication of Robert Putnam's provocative works Making Democracy Work and 'Bowling Alone.' As William Galston observed, 'seldom has a thesis moved so quickly from scholarly obscurity to conventional wisdom ...Putnam's argument has touched a nerve. Most Americans believe that during the past forty years, important aspects of their society may have changed for the worse.'

One might speculate that this resurgence of interest is at least in part a reaction to the conditions of post-modern or post-industrial social organization. In a heterogenous society where there are ever fewer shared beliefs, cultural references, and practices, where the population is increasingly mobile and thus unrooted, where familial ties are strained by distances, where family structure has been transformed, and where we often seem to lack common purpose and common identity, the communitarian impulse of the civil society and social capital argument is without doubt highly attractive to many. That said, this literature frequently comes under attack for its nostalgic portrait of a bygone era as the golden age of civil society. Critics point out -entirely correctly - that such nostalgia can contain an unrealistic and possibly undesirable longing to return to an era that predates women's entry into the paid workforce, greater freedoms for women, increased legal and social tolerance of ethnic and sexual diversity, and a relaxation of punishing social norms dressed up as conventional morality. A. Code of Behaviour

Since you are being placed into a real-world work experience [and will be rated on your professionalism there] we also simulate that in your Class/Course performance. Please note the stringent requirements for written work, class attendance, preparedness, the heavy writing load over 12 weeks and immovable deadlines. Just as a Minister cannot accept meetings missed, work handed in late, work over or under length, and work written in unapproachable academese, we'll role play this situation in POL 491/2191

Note also the Code of Behaviour specified in the Service-Learning Handbook.

Lest this seem unapproachable see the testimonials below:

"It has been a long time now, or at least it feels like it. This is CD, a student of yours from a few years ago. You were a remarkably useful resource and sounding board during my undergrad years. In fact, I don't think I would be where I am today if it wasn't for you and your helpful nature.

"I was thinking about the internship that I completed at Public Interest last winter and just how valuable that experience and the course was. At first, it was difficult adjusting to the non-theoretical, practical nature of the course; simply because it is so different from what is generally offered within the department. And, I want to extend my thanks for that unique learning experience. Kaneil

"My involvement with Student Vote originated out of a service-learning project for a seminar class and quickly evolved into a personal project of passion. I completed the time commitments within the first week of my placement, yet continued my contribution to this non-profit on a full-time basis. ... At Student Vote I was motivated by the desire to engage and invite youth to share my passion for the political process and legislation – to make them understand how government and their choices matter. Laura

"I thought you might be interested to know that I'm about to accept a position with Metrolinx doing policy analysis. I took your advice and have decided to leave law school for the time being and help the GTHA get to yes on their transportation issues. If it hadn't of been for your class I would never have known it was something I may be good at or enjoy; so thank you. Hope you're well Tom

"I'm hoping you remember me from your Democracy in Decline Class from 2010-2011. I know it has been a long time since we chatted but I really wanted to tell you how much your lessons in class have taught me. I talk about your class all the time to my colleagues and I am so happy to have learned the things I did. I have been involved in a couple of projects and one of them is a direct result of the knowledge I gained from this course! Anyway, I hope all is well! I just wanted to e-mail to say thank you again for all of the wonderful lessons learned from the class. Hopefully when my project is close to coming to fruition, you will be able to provide me feedback! I hope you are enjoying your school year so far and if you need volunteers or help with anything please do not hesitate to contact me! Regards, Laizabelle

"I found your class to be the most challenging one I took during my undergraduate degree, but also the most rewarding because of its emphasis on acquiring skills and not just knowledge. I liked how the course was practical in the sense that it defined clear cut problems and offered concrete solutions to them, as opposed to exclusively studying different theories/paradigms/thinkers and contemplating problems with no solutions (which were my main gripes with a lot of the other Poli Sci courses I've taken). I really felt that the type of approach to solving problems that POL 491 helped me develop actually gave me a better perspective in the other classes that I took last year I ended up using the short introductory chapter by Nevitte (in one of the required books) for essays in a few other classes). I liked how his tone was optimistic (citizen-state relations aren't deteriorating, they're changing) compared to Putnam and others who were focused on the "decline". I also really liked the amazing series of guest speakers. I had no conception of how many different types of careers people can embark on from a political science background. The lawyer who came in towards the end of the year to talk about ADR really impressed me. Her description of the "legal knowledge deficit" on the part of the Canadian public and how some lawyers are trying to address it really cemented my desire to go to law school. Daniel

"I wanted to thank you for an opportunity to take your course. Your lectures gave me a better understanding of the democratic deficit and ideas on how it can be reduced especially the issue of trust within a society. Kinisha

"Thank you for all of your time and effort put into creating one of the most innovative classes I have experienced during my time at U of T. Thomas"
