Course Description

What is justice? How does political activity contribute, if at all, to a flourishing human life? What are the arguments for and against political equality? How may pre- and Early-Modern considerations on questions concerning gender inform current-day debates? By exploring these guiding questions in the company of Plato, Aristotle, Christine de Pizan, Machiavelli, Hobbes, and Locke, this course serves as an introduction to ancient and early-modern political philosophy in the European tradition. Our goal is to interpret core texts in this tradition through careful reading and writing. In reflecting on the affinities, differences, and tensions generated by each thinker's vision of the good society, we will also aim to develop the faculties required for thinking critically about our own political horizons.

Pedagogical Aims in this Course

Successful Students in POL200 will:

- develop the skills necessary for writing interpretive/argumentative essays in political theory
- develop the reading skills necessary for following the argumentation and grasping the wisdom contained in some of the most important, foundational texts in Western political philosophy
- acquire fresh perspectives for critically assessing the moral and ethical dimensions of contemporary issues in politics
- develop a healthy skepticism towards fashionable ideas and ideologies, while building the confidence to enlarge and defend their own civic outlook

Paper Expectations

PAPERS MUST CITE PRIMARY SOURCES. This will be repeated, but there will be no exceptions. Paper evaluation will be based largely on demonstrated familiarity with the readings.

Sources should be cited correctly, using Chicago style format: Use of secondary sources is discouraged, but if used they must be cited.

Essay topics will be emailed out well before the essays are due

Late papers will be penalized 2% a day.

Turnitin

Students will be expected to submit their papers to turnitin. Submission guidelines will be provided by the instructor.

PLAGIARISM GUIDELINES: You should familiarize yourself with the university’s policy on plagiarism. Plagiarism is a serious academic offense and will be dealt with accordingly. For further clarification and information, please see the University’s policy on plagiarism. You must write your papers specifically for this class; you should not borrow material from another class; and you should not use another person’s words or ideas without attribution, whether those words or ideas come from conversations, the internet, or printed materials. If you are in doubt about whether you are committing plagiarism, feel free to ask the lecturer or a discussion leader; but a good rule of thumb is that if you are in doubt, then cite a source. Students are strongly advised to keep all rough and draft work related to a particular assignment until the assignment has been marked and returned. It would be wise to examine the guidelines on writing provided. Normally, students will be required to submit their course essays to Turnitin.com for a review of textual similarity and detection of possible plagiarism. In doing so, students will allow their essays to be included as source documents in the Turnitin.com reference database, where they will be used solely for the purpose of detecting plagiarism. The terms that apply to the University’s use of the Turnitin.com service are described on the Turnitin.com web site.
