

POL 2102F/490F: Topics in Canadian Politics
Change and Continuity in Canadian Electoral Politics

This is a graduate level course in which 4th year POL specialist students with appropriate background and interests are welcome to participate. Course requirements are the same for both graduate and undergraduate students. In this seminar, long term trends in Canadian electoral politics will be examined from the perspective of the core theoretical concepts in the study of voting behaviour and elections. We will also consider the ability of shorter term factors such as election campaigns, social media, economic performance, or new issues and problems to disrupt or alter these longer term trends. Students will have the opportunity to conduct original research on these topics utilizing data from the 2019 Canadian Election Study. Based on this work, we will compare the Canadian data with findings in other democratic countries and consider the implications of both longer term social trends and shorter term campaign effects for theories of political realignment and social change in Canada.

OTHER SOURCES:

There is a vast theoretical and empirical literature on elections and voting. The following books will be available on reserve at the Robarts Library. Several of the books listed below contain an extensive bibliography of the comparative literature. See especially Elections and Voters (pp. 265-291), Comparing Democracies 4 (pp. 205-235), or Citizen Politics (pp.305-326). A more substantial listing of Canadian references may be found in Absent Mandate (pp. 185-197), Dominance and Decline (pp. 203-220) or The Canadian Election Studies (pp. 222-258). Journals such as the Canadian Journal of Political Science, Electoral Studies, or the Journal of Elections, Public Opinion and Parties, will also be useful sources of material for students in this course.

DATASET AND SOFTWARE:

The best source for accessing the 2019 CES is ODESI (Ontario Data Documentation, Extraction Service and Infrastructure), a digital repository for social science data. The ODESI site also archives a number of other data files that may be of interest to students in this course, but our primary work will be with the 2019 online survey which contains 620 variables compiled from 37,822 respondents interviewed during the 2019 federal election campaign. 10,337 of these respondents were re-interviewed in the post-election wave of the study conducted after the election. See <https://search2.odesi.ca/#!/details?uri=%2Fodesi%2FCES-E-2019-online.xml>

The 2019 CES online data file, together with appropriate documentation, can be downloaded from the ODESI site in several different formats, including SPSS, STATA, and SAS. The STATA file can also be read by other data analysis software such as R. Students should download the appropriate file for their own work, although it is also possible to explore the data and conduct a limited amount of analysis directly on the ODESI site.

Appropriate data analysis software such as SPSS, STATA or R is available on work stations of the Map and Data Library in Robarts, as well as on a number of other work stations in Sid Smith or Robarts. See <https://mdl.library.utoronto.ca/technology/statistical-software> for a description of available software.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS:

The principal requirement for this course is a substantial (approximately 25 page) original research paper based on analysis of the 2019 Canadian Election Study online survey data. It will count for 50% of the total mark for the course. This paper is due at the December 7th class, and the research on which it is based will be discussed in one of the two final classes (November 30th or December 7th). A final interview, which will form part of the process of evaluation of this work, will be scheduled individually with each student at the end of the term.

Three smaller assignments are linked to this project as follows:

- (1) Variable discussion paper (1-2 pages). Due September 28th (5%)
- (2) Research design paper (4-5 pages). Due October 12th (10%)
- (3) Literature review paper (5-8 pages). Due November 2nd (15%)

Class participation, including in-class discussion of the assignments and research presentations (20%)

All work completed in the three smaller assignments may be incorporated into the final paper. Please consult the essay guidelines posted on Quercus for more details regarding these assignments.
